Stop Press: An Evening with Paul Rees

Born in London, brought up in Surrey, Paul Rees studied marketing at the University of Newcastle upon Tyne, worked in various marketing positions in the consumer, luxury and electrical goods industries, and then in fundraising for various charity organisations for ten years. He has lived variously in London, Sussex, Berkshire, Surrey, Argyllshire, Pembrokeshire, and Northamptonshire. He lived in Portugal for 2 years in the mid-80s and again full time from 2003, building family sized villas and being involved in other property development and business interests including algarvedailynews. He has found a quiet home with his wife and rescue dog in the hubbub of Olhão, whereas his two daughters now live in the UK and Denmark. Interests include witnessing the Algarve's resurgence, and collecting antique barometers. His mission is to highlight corruption and stupidity in Portugal and to remain unexpelled. Quirky, forthright and amusing, Paul promises an evening of highly entertaining stories
