The Inquisition in the Portuguese Empire

In the second part of her talk on the Portuguese Inquisition, Rachel Barnard turns her attention to the activities of the Inquisition in the Empire. Established in Portugal in 1536 and abolished only in 1821, the Inquisition established its eastern headquarters in Goa in 1560. The administrative centre of the Inquisition continued in Lisbon. The Lisbon tribunal was responsible for all prosecutions originating in Portuguese possessions on the Atlantic. Who were the targets of the Inquisition in the Empire? Why were these people prosecuted? How did the central headquarters of the Inquisition attempt to control the principles and methods used by the prosecutors in such a wide diversity of cultures?

What effect did the Inquisition have on the Syrian St Thomas Christians, those Christians who had been established in India before the Portuguese arrived in 1498? The Portuguese Inquisition was also active in Brazil, and after the Dutch were forced to leave Brazil in 1654 many Jews who had sheltered under the tolerant Dutch flag also chose to leave. Join Rachel for part two, as she completes her survey of the Inquisition in the history of Portugal.

Portugal Inside Out

Manuel Trindade is a Portuguese who has lived, studied and worked in eight countries and in three continents. His latest academic degree is the One Planet MBA from the University of Exeter Business School. Manuel has experience working in the fields of Technology Service Operations, Oil & Gas, Event Management, Journalism and Human Resources. His last position was Facilities Manager at Fujitsu Technology Solutions, Portugal. He has learned ten languages, of which he speaks six fluently. Manuel's international career path and his Portuguese soul give him the unique vision of someone who has returned to Portugal. He will share his insights into what it is to be a Portuguese, why that has brought him back to Tavira and what his footloose spirit has now in store. Manuel has spent some time living in Angola and he has recently visited Madagascar. His experience as an estrangeirado (a Portuguese who has lived abroad and returned) will be of interest to both Portuguese and to foreigners who live here. I expect him to be controversial!
